VOLUME 2

The material in this volume is designed primarily to illustrate the legislative response to environmental problems and the ways in which administrative bodies and courts have reacted to this legislative response. The volume is divided into three parts, the first dealing with water, the second dealing with air and the third with noise. These topics have been selected arbitrarily and are dictated at least to some extent by the teaching time available, and one must recognize that any collection of cases and materials on environmental law which does not deal specifically with problems of planning of waste disposal and of conservation, to mention only three matters, leaves some rather large gaps. It is in this spirit that the material was prepared, with the hope that additional sections can and will be added in subsequent years.
